Rebecca Edwards
Chief Communications Officer,

Becky is an accomplished communications executive with a track record of success in both corporate and nonprofit sectors. With a passion for narrative change, she has dedicated her career to fostering stakeholder engagement to achieve business and societal impact. This background suits her particularly well in her role as chief communications officer at Organon, a global healthcare company dedicated to making a world of difference for women, their families, and the communities they care for.

Becky's career journey began in journalism, where at Dow Jones she moved from administrative assistant to a reporter at The Wall Street Journal. Her career has taken her from the U.S. Northeast to London and Geneva for roles with GE and the International Olympic Committee, respectively. She has led global teams operating in more than 200 countries and, more recently, a team at the American Civil Liberties Union focused on defending democracy.

Her undergraduate degree in humanities is from Georgetown University's School of Foreign Service and she has an MBA in media management from Fordham University.

Beyond her professional life, Becky finds joy in her family, rowing, writing and sometimes, running. She and her husband, John, have been happily married for twenty- three years. Their son, Jake, is a student at NYU, while their daughter, Rita, is a gallery assistant in New York. In her free time, Becky also works to advance the field of communications and develop leaders by serving on the boards of the Page Society and mentoring women of color.
